NEED FOR CONTINUOUS IMPROVEMENT OF PEDAGOGY

When children in their developmental years spend more time with books, or the computer-based aids or games, than relating and interacting with the real, natural world is impaired with the chance of attention deficit, dullness, or passivity setting in. This may eventually lead to an alienation from the real world. The relationship with the virtual world becoming stronger leads to an alienation from the natural world.

As our children come from diverse socio-linguistic-cultural backgrounds, we innovate in our pedagogical approaches on an ongoing basis to evoke the passion for learning and to provide a proper base to their understanding and knowledge.
