NEW TEACHING LEARNING MATERIALS

Scope for teachers to experiment and prepare new teaching-learning materials

Most teacher-educators with flair and passion for teaching realize the limitation of textbooks; wish to provide innovative and out-of-the-box classroom exposure to the students. Inadvertently, they begin preparing and using their own teaching-learning materials and approaches.

Our school invites teachers to be in this innovative and creative mode. It supports and nurtures teachers to go deeper into the aspects of curriculum development and encourages them to prepare and use their own teaching learning material. We intend to provide the following options to teachers with reference to the teaching material they can use for their classes:

1. One could begin with a textbook and prepare material to supplement it.
2. One could photocopy and use the earlier material (prepared by others or oneself) for classroom teaching.
3. One could prepare material based on the earlier material and use them for teaching.
4. One could ignore the earlier material and prepare original and unique material.
5. One could conduct classes spontaneously, dynamically and sensitively without referring to any material in the classroom. This approach is adopted by only a few teachers; those with long experience and with a flair for teaching. Such teachers also make appropriate material available to the students for later revision.
6. One could recommend and use a textbook if one is comfortable that way.
